Private payrolls that were released by ADP this morning, Wages are rising only a fraction of what economists had expected. ADP reported on Wednesday Private wages rose by 167,000 last month, according to the ADP, well below the 1.034 million expected from economists surveyed by FactSet and a big drop from a revised 4.3 million positions created in June, although the number in June was revised significantly higher than originally reported by 2.37-million. The company, with 50-499 employees, reported a direct reduction of 25,000 people per month. Big business added 129,000 jobs, while firms with fewer than 50 employees added 63,000. ADP said. All but 1,000 jobs came from the services sector, while professional and business services led up with 58,000. The hospitality sector, which bears the brunt of the pandemic and the subsequent shutdowns, has placed 38,000 new positions. These figures help paint a picture of businesses trying to reopen and re-hire workers in the face of the now five-month pandemic, which has thrown a wrench into the U.S. economic wheels, and forced businesses to reassess if and how they might operate. Virtual signage in the game for NBA Sponsors Bubble The first week passed without a hitch for the NBA reboot of the Orlando bubble, and the league got creative about ways to attract more sponsorship opportunities. According to Sports Business Daily, each of the 22 teams has the opportunity to demonstrate the team's partners and sponsors through virtual signs on the court, in front of the players' benches and on the sidelines. Twenty-one of the 22 teams used both on the court and virtual signage from the bench. DraftKings and FanDuel have both invested heavily in virtual signage opportunities as two rival bookmakers and daily fantasy providers continue to find new ways to go head-to-head.
